

Research with children and young people

Online training to enhance your research

What it's about

This specialised course focuses on the unique responsibilities involved in working with children and younger participants (CYP). It equips learners to conduct such research in a respectful, inclusive, and ethically responsible manner – recognising children as competent, active participants throughout.

What you'll learn

- How CYP are legally defined and how research involving them has evolved
- Core ethical principles for research with CYP and what they mean in practice
- How consent, assent, and dissent work when involving CYP in research
- Why participatory methods matter for ensuring CYPs' voices are heard
- Key considerations when using digital or online research tools with CYP
- Current ethical debates and challenges in CYP-focused research
